

CENOTE CASA TORTUGA AND TULUM / PRIVATE EXCURSION

Guarantee: 10 ppl

Itinerary: From 9.00 a.m. to 1.00 p.m.

Casa Tortuga might just be one of the best off-the-path cenotes in Tulum. It is newly opened so not too many people actually know how awesome this place is... Yet.

Visiting Casa Tortuga is sort like a cenote tour of a series of three cenotes in a park. A tour guide leads you to visit two cave cenotes and an open cenote. One of the cave cenotes you are led inside where you can see bats and interesting blind cave fish. In the other, you are taught about the rock formations and interesting cave geology facts while experiencing slight vertigo caused by the crystal-clear water and the sheer depth of the cave. The open cenote is mainly for fun. You can jump in off the edge and swim around. If you're lucky you'll spot a resident turtle swimming alongside you.

The cenotes of Casa Tortuga are perfect for newbies who want an in-depth introduction into the cenotes on a tour. The cenote tour can take some time, especially if you need to wait for more members before the tour can leave, so make sure you leave at least a few hours to complete the entire route.

Unit Style:

Toyota for 12 ppl max / Sprinters for 16 ppl max

Capacity in Cenote:

12-15 pax at same time

Entrances at Cenote:

TULUM ARCHAEOLOGICAL SITE

The Mayan city of Tulum stands 130 km south and 700 years away of Cancun. But the contrast between the two, can be measured in more than just distance and time. Cancun is a string of large resort hotels, which did not exist prior to 1974 and which specialize in the expected. Tulum, on the other hand, was built late in the thirteenth century, during what is known as the Mayan post-classic period. With a little imagination and knowledge, the ruins become a giant puzzle waiting to be pieced together.

The city of Tulum was previously known as Zama, meaning City of Dawn. Its current name means "fence or trench" in Mayan. It is a rare city built by the Mayans because it is one of the few walled cities. Being both on a sea and land route, it had major historical importance as a center of trading. The city flourished between the 13th and the 15th centuries, fading only 70 years after the Spanish army started conquering today's Mexico. Although there is no specific data about its population at its height, estimates put it between 1,000 and 1,600. The site was inhabited as early as the 6th century.

Tulum ruins are perched on 12 meter high cliffs facing the Caribbean Sea. It is the 3rd most visited site in Mexico and the most visited spot in the state of Quintana Roo.
